U.S. to Allow Patents On New Forms of Life

By Keith Schneider New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - The U.S. government, in a decision with broad moral and ethical implications, has said it is clearing the way for inventors to patent new forms of animal life created through gene splicing.

The policy, detailed Thursday by the Commerce Department, would allow the patenting of animals with new traits produced by a variety of new reproductive technologies, including genetic engineering.

The policy was adopted by the department's Patent and Trademark Office and is scheduled to be published Tuesday. It will make the United States the first country to patent animals.

The policy specifically bars the patenting of new genetic character-istics in humans. But one official of the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office acknowledged that the decision could eventually lead to commercial protection of new human traits.

"The decision says higher life forms will be considered and it could be extrapolated to human beings," said Charles E. Van Horn, director of organic chemistry and biotechnology in the patent office. "But for the time being, we are not going to consider applications involving human life."

A coalition of animal welfare and public policy groups led hy the Humane Society of the United States and the Foundation on Economic Trends in Washington was formed Thursday to block the po-

"We are not only playing God, we are assuming dominion over God."

The policy has important economic consequences for the biotechnology industry and for agriculture, the fields in which much of the research is being conducted, according to scientists and farming experts.

It often takes years to produce such traits if natural, selective breeding is used, the scientists said. The research also opens the possibility of creating entirely new kinds of livestock. Scientists say that the technology will eventually make it possible to mix animal, plant, microbe and human genes into animal embryos to produce custom-designed animals.

For example, researchers at the Department of Agriculture's research station in Beltsville, Maryland, have inserted a human growth hormone gene into pig embryos to make pigs grow faster.

The experiment produced a line of pigs that passed the human trait to their offspring. The animals are leaner than naturally bred pigs, but they suffer from several debilitating ailments, including crossed eyes, severe arthritis in the joints and susceptibility to disease.

In several other universities and private laboratories, scientists are developing methods to clone precise replicas of cattle, sheep, pigs, goats and other livestock by care-

A SPECT DAY.

A decade ago, about 10 of the 100 or so Academy Award nominations a year were won by films released by small studios. The total this year was 36. In 1977, only one of the 20 acting nominations went to a nonmajor studio performance. This year, 11 of the 20 went to small studios. "Pletoon," winner of four awards including best picture, was produced by Hemdale. "A Room With a View," winner of three awards, was financed and distributed by Cinecom. The New York Times says the small producers and distributors are unanimous about the main reason for their success: The major studios have abandoned small, serious, risky films, the kind that often win prizes. "The overhead, the cost of running a studio is so enormous that their movies must do $100 million at the box office," said John Daly, chairman of Hem-dale, which has also produced "Hoosiers." "So the daring, provocative, small-in-budget but large-in-heart pictures have found their way to Hemdale and companies like us."

Hollywood thus finds itself going the way of Broadway. where costs are so huge that only a smash hit can make money, giving rise to the more modest off-Broadway and even offoff-Broadway theaters. The Motion Picture Association of America says the average major studio film in 1986 cost $16 million to make and $7 million to market:

Almost half of the bridges in the United States are structurally deficient, no longer able to carry the loads for which they were designed, the Federal Highway Administration says. Defector Says Warsaw Pact Planned

Invasion of Poland Over Solidarity

By John H. Cushman Jr. WASHINGTON - For more than four years, seven nations worked in secrety to limit the ex-port of large missiles suitable for nuclear weapons. On Thursday, as the controls were announced, the negotiators expressed relief and surprise that their work had not been disclosed ahead of time. Had it been widely publicized, a U.S. official said, the task would have become more complex. The seven nations would have faced pressure from domestic industries and foreign customers, he said.

Countries that rely on imported missile technologies in their space programs might have sought to hwart the controls.

Officials said there had been two reports about the negotiations in Japanese newspapers, one a few months ago and one in 1983.

"We held our breath for two days, expecting questions, and nobody asked," an official said of the earlier report, which escaped Western attention.

Partly out of concern that news of the talks would become known, the seven nations put into effect on an informal basis in 1985 some of the controls that have now been adopted.

While there were limits to the restrictions that could be imposed. an official said, all the nations were worried about the danger of a spread of missiles capable of carrying nuclear warheads.

The agreement, announced Thursday by the White House was concluded on April 7 in an exchange of letters among the United States, Canada, Britain, France, West Germany, Italy and Japan.

The controls apply to technol-ogies that would enable production of any missile or other production of any missile or other unmanned chicle capable of carrying an 1,100-pound (about 500-kilogram) warhead a distance of 190 miles (about 305 kilometers). It does not limit the sale of manned aircraft.

This definition was adopted, according to U.S. officials, because it describes the approximate weight of a crude nuclear device and the minimum distance at which such weapons would be militarily useful. Although the effort to limit the spread is not new, U.S. officials said it gained impetus in 1982 on instructions from President Ronald Reagan.

went to war - against the United States. He signed an order doubling the price of an array of electronic imports from Japan. The Japanese will surely feel the blow, but so will all America.

The proclamation slaps these products with 100 percent tariffs to punish Japan for violating an agreement to restrict trade in microchips. There are three things wrong with that: One, it was an odious agreement, rammed down Japan's throat in a sorry surrender to U.S. protectionists; it created a price-fixing cartel. Two, it is not clear that Japan violated it. Three, heavy sanctions for such an offense in such a world economic climate are folly.

Unquestionably, many Americans resent Japan's foreign trade tactics and Japanese capacity to refine U.S. inventions and then overwhelm U.S. markets, while barring their doors to loreign competition. America is no saint when it comes to freezing out imports, but there is still much truth behind the resentment. But the two countries' trade relations are intricate. Brute retaliation may be exhilarating hut it satisfies no sense of justice to shoot oneself in the loot.

The specifie issue concerns the tiny silicon chips imprinted with thousands of circuits that animate computers and electronic devices. Last year the Reagan administration came under heavy pressure from American chip makers losing business, workers losing jobs and the congressmen who represent them. The administration proceeded to find the Japanese guilty of "dumping" chips, that is, undercutting other manufacturers hy selling below cost.

The accepted next step would have been in impose an offsetting tariff. Instead, the administration forced Japan intt last summer's agreement to rig prices and buy more U.S. chips. Consider whom that agreement ultimately punishes: American consumers.

Friday was the day President Reagan Last month the government said Japan was ent to war — against the United States. not complying and the president announced his intention to retaliate.

Japan responded with tighter controls on its producers; let everyone hope that it does not also counterretaliate. With economic activity already sluggish in both countries, the last thing the world needs is for them to plunge into trade war. Just the announcement that Mr. Reagan would resort to retaliation triggered turmoil in the financial markets; they have not settled down since. His proclamation hits at selected products that contain Japanese chips, avoiding popular products for which a 100 percent price hike would set off a howl. Even so, at earings this week, dozens of importers protested. Among them, police officials testified that it would put a prohibitive price on sophisticated Japanese fingerprint systems they have already ordered.

The one disturbing argument for retalia-tion concerns defense: U.S. microchip production is vital in the nation's security. But that is an argument for developing production techniques to rival Japan's, not for building walls in preserve the American industry as is. In any case, the dispute involves produced chips, not the cutting-edge circuitry in which America still prevails.

The way in build a stronger industry is by letting it consolidate, through joint re-search and mergers; with subsidies and antitrust waivers if necessary, but preferably on its own. In dealing with the stuhborn Japanese, the only sensible strategy is to keep pressing on all fronts - in badger them relentlessly for more access to their markets and lor economic policies that increase consumption and reduce their extreme dependence on exports.

President Reagan, however, seems determined a give in a the protectionists. America will pay.

The Weight of the Dollar

Interest rates, unfortunately, have risen sharply in the United States nver the past several weeks. The increase has been particularly severe lor long-term debt. Some mortgage lenders have raised their rates 2 percentage points since mid-March. It is connected in the fall of the dollar in the foreign exchange market, and government policy will not be able to do much about it.

It is not solely the demand lor loans that is pushing up interest. There is also a decline in the flow of money available to be lent,

The United States has been living well for the past four years on money borrowed from loreigners. When foreign lenders and investors sent their money to America, they had to buy dollars. That bid the dollar up on world currency exchange markets, and is the principal reason for the extraordinary rise of the dollar in the early 1980s. At the same time, this flow of foreign money increased the supply of credit available to American borrowers and helped bring interest rates down.

Now that process may have begun to run in reverse. It is still too early to see the pattern precisely. But it is clear that less foreign moncy is coming into the United States than a year or two ago. U.S. investment has to be financed either by American savings have been declining steadily. Gross savings averaged more than 18 percent of GNP in the late 1970s. The average figure is now about 12 percent, For a time the foreigners' money compensated far some of that drop in Americans' willingness to save. But as foreigners grow less savings or by loreign money, and American enthusiastic about sending their money to the United States, the competition for a shrinking pool of savings is becoming visible in the rising interest rates. What should the government --- specifically the Federal Reserve Board - do? It can expand the money supply further to try to hold rates down and encourage economic growth. But the rapid fall of the dollar cannot be permitted to continue indefinitely. To stabilize it will probably require higher interest rates, and the Federal Reserve's chief responsibility is to protect the dollar. The dollar's exchange rate is not a remote abstraction, of interest only to bankers and economists. Perhaps Americans are not quite used to the idea, but it is connected directly to many things that have great weight in their national life - interest rates, unemployment rates and, consequently, perhaps even next year's presidential election.

PARIS — The 1979 decision by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to put medium-range American missiles in Europe unless the Soviets pulled theirs out is now coming full circle. Mikhail Gorbachev said yes, his would go. The major European allies then said something would have to be done about the huge Soviet advantage (estimated in be 9 in 1) in shorter-range missiles. Mr. Gorbachev said get rid of them all

Now NATO is torn. West Germany, Britain and France do not like the idea of coming so near to denuclearizing Europe while Moscow has a big advantage in conventional arms. They worry about whether they could count on the U.S. "shield" if that meant all-out intercontinental nuclear war in case Western non-nuclear defenses were overwhelmed. Linked together, these arguments sound reluctant and inverted from countries that had been urging the United States to negotiate arms reduction. Tass said Mr. Gorbachev asked Secretary of State George Shultz, "What are you afraid of?"

The Soviet leader has astutely learned that "da, da" goes down much better with the public than "nyet, nyet," As a result, Western officials complain that he has ontmanenvered them in the propaganda game. If the Reagan White House really feels it has lost the lead to Moscow in the public relations race, what is it better at?

The confusion, and there really is confusion in Western establishments now, spotlights the failure all these years to develop contingency planning lor arms control alongside military planning. This near-whimpering response to the Soviet

"da" campaign shows disappointingly little confi-dence or capacity for decision. But it is understandable in one sense. Balanced or not, the exist-ing NATO strategy of "flexible response," threatening use of nuclear weapons against massive conventional attack, has kept the peace lor two generations. It has been easy to argue its Irightening lanlts, but it worked. Meanwhile, peace has enabled Western Europe to grow prosperous and leave the East far behind.

By Flora Lewis

Not everyone was so sure that would happen when Nikita Khrushchev said, "We will bury you." So despite fears about the staggering concentration of arms on their continent, European leaders are uneasy about tinkering with NATO's arsenal. It is a case of the devil you know ...

Prudence is essential on these fateful issues. But it is not a reason to stick in a rut, especially a rut bristling with nuclear arms. The time has come to summon the courage to climb out. The reserve reflects the reality that arms and fears cause each other and it is hard to get rid of one first.

somewhere to disarmament if there is not eventually to be a breakout of force. The deal being negotiated now is a good start. It would be less worrisome for the allies, and probable American critics, if there were a clearer idea of where it ought to lead and how to get there. So much effort has been put into waging the Cold War, and so little into seeking ways out, that there are no guidelines. Walt W. Rostow, President Lyndon Johnson's national security adviser, has come up with a thoughtful, if general, approach in his article "On

Nonetheless, there has to be a hreakthrough

Ending the Cold War," in the current Foreign Affairs. At least he is looking ahead. Among professionals in Sovietology, there are "dealers" and "squeezers," in the crisp words of the Rand Corporation's Arnald Horelick. "Dealers" want agreement with the Soviets for its own sake, without admitting that it will not be available without some squeeze. "Squeezers" forget that they will not get anywhere without being willing to deal, and they will lose public support and the capacity to squeeze. Mr. Rostow is no "dealer." But he has laid out a long-term agenda for changing East-West relations with three major points: dealing with the nuclear arms race, Soviet acceptance of a power balance that would assure nobody else can dominate Eastern Enrope so it can renounce hegemony, and rules to keep the Cold War out of regional conflicts. As he points out, this would not be easy, and at best it would take a long time. Still, it offers a goal to measure whether each proposed step is in the right direction. Since each step could change the climate and reduce tensions along with arms, there is even a chance of acceleration after the tough beginnings are engaged. There is no need to look for Mr. Gorbachev's ntentions in tea leaves. The need is to decide what is in the West's best interest as the process evolves. Certainly that is in reinforce peace. Political, social and economic rivalry with Moscow would continue, but there is no reason to fear that. An agreement with the Soviets would be a triumph for President Reagan after serious setbacks. All the better for all concerned. The New York Times.

Great Opportunity, Great Risk

Once again, it is urgent in wait. All the European leaders think so. Mikhail Gorbachev has suddenly hit the accelerator and left NATO faced with one of the most important decisions in its nearly 40 years. The tensions introduced hy Mr. Gorbachev are literally explosive. It is understandable that the Europeans -otherwise tempted by the simple charm of Gorbachevian strens ---will now take time in think it over. We can dream, as Lenin so judiciously advised. The enormity of the stakes for NATO requires a political response of equal measure.

- Liberation (Paris).

If a zero option on medium-range missiles were to lead directly to the removal of [shorter-range] missiles, NATO's flexible defense strategy would be annulled and the elock turned back by 25 years.

- Berlingske Tidende (Copenhagen).

What Mr. Gorbachev is doing is designed to undermine the twin pillars on which NATO is lounded - the coupling of the United States in Europe and the threatened early use of nuclear weapons as a deterrent to attack hy superior Soviet conventional lorces. The fact that those pillars have both become somewhat shaky with age does nothing to lessen the awfulness of the dilemma Mr. Gorbachev has posed for Europe.

Those who argue that flexible response will be safeguarded by the nuclear weapons which would he left after a Gorbachev superdeal are deluding themselves. It is equally wrong to suppose that European governments might at last spend enough money to secure deterrence with conventional forces. Mr. Gorbachev's initiatives have exposed decades of hypocrisy. It is time for European political leaders to indulge in a little straight-talking, before it is too late.

these days seems to be for a deeper change that would cut across party lines. Labor and Likud stand equally discredited. The shift in the air seems more generational than ideological. Israelis are conservative in the profoundest sense. They are apprehensive about change in the point that they will instinctively stick with any setup if it is just barely tolerable. But this inertia is now being challenged by a weariness so deep that it is becoming militant. It is not just the scandals or the anthology of hlunders or the cover-ups. It is the sense that the leaders - creatic and constantly fighting with one another - have overstayed their welcome. The common argument against freshening up the top echelons has at its core a question: Who can guarantee anxious and worried Israelis that the new will be better than the nld? For years it was inconceivable to Israclis that someone who was not on the bridge in the 1960s can be at the is, across this nation, which has put an unparalleled trust in its leaders, a growing feeling that they are now committed mainly to their own survival, that they are protecting each other beyond party lines. There is some irony in this need for protection. These are good times in Israel. The stores are full of goods and custnmers. All flights abroad are booked two months ahead. The annual inflation rate now is about what the monthly rate was two years ago. New American films and fads and compact disks arrive here within weeks.

So why new leaders? Since independence, Israel has had good people to lead it. A younger generation was hardly ever given a chance. A lew, like Moshe Dayan, made it to the top, but only at a relatively advanced age. Without reju-venation, the quality of the leading group has lost its luster. NEW YORK - No Iurther light has been thrown on the mystery of the Titanic's destruction. A lew additional names of people rescued have been transmitted ashore. But not one additional word has come through to relieve the minds of relatives and friends of the Titanic's passengers. instead of confirming yesterday's [April 16] announcement that 868 were saved, there are indications that the number is far below that figure. This is based upon a message from Camperdown station, reading: "We are now in direct communication with the Carpathia via the Franconia. Only 705 Titanic passengers aboard." Commenting on the disaster, The New York Tribune said: "We hear of swimming pools, tennis courts and paim gardens on the great ship. Was there no room for enough boats to carry more than one-fourth or one-third of the passengers and crew?"

Can the Markets Be Trusted To Narrow the Trade Gap?

> By LEONARD SILK New York Times Service

EW YORK - The massive U.S. trade deficit and the buge surpluses of Japan, West Germany and the newly industrialized Asian nations could become the focal point of the 1988 presidential campaign. The U.S. trade imbalance, which widened again in February, is already imposing severe strains on international relations.

At the German-American conference of political and business leaders in Berlin last week, Robert D. Hormats, vice president for international affairs at Goldman, Sachs and a former U.S. assistant secretary of state, warned against what he called "wrong-headed solutions" to the trade problem:

Some think it is · Inducing further depreciation of the dollar, which would increase inflation, retard foreign growth and cut the market for American exports.

· Deliberately creating a recession in the United States, which could cause a global slump. • Stimulating major inflation as a means of repudiating the repayment of foreign debt, which could lead to a world financial catastrophe.

As undesirable as those alternatives are, Mr. Hormats said, the status quo is impossible. He said that the question was not whether the U.S. deficit would decline, but how - in an orderly or disorderly way.

If the $170 billion deficit posted by the United States in 1986 were to be cut to just $50 billion in the next three or four years, which countries would absorb the $120 billion cut? Japan, West Germany and others have been struggling to avoid such a shrinkage of their trade surpluses. But the trade problem cannot be solved until they face up to that necessity.

HOSE COUNTRIES have sought to maintain their currencies roughly at their current levels, but that appears increasingly impossible unless fundamental economic forces are altered. The U.S. secretary of the Treasury, James A. Baker 3d, frequently has been accused of "talking the dollar down." But when he has said supportive things about the dollar, insisting that "a more solid basis for sustained growth and international financial stability" is urgent, the markets have paid no heed and instead have continued to mark the dollar down. This trend represents the markets' judgment not so much of Mr. Baker's credibility, but of underlying economic forces. Some Americans at the Berlin conference thought it was pointless or even counterproductive for the United States to try to interfere with the markets' action. "Only one thing will correct the imbalances - the market," said Donald M. Kendall, chairman of the executive committee of Pepsico Inc. "The Japanese may take a little steam out of the tea kettle, but Europe will not do anything. The only thing left is to let the market forces of exchange work." But with the recent high voiatility in currencies and the bond and stock markets, and the failure of the trade deficit to shrink, other economists are worried. The policy issue facing the United States and other govern-ments now is whether to let the market forces operate, trusting that even if there is an interlude of disorder, they will ultimately restore balance to exchange rates in world trade; or to keep trying to achieve a consensus with Japan. West Germany and others for a more orderly solution to the problems of exchange rates, growth and economic expansion.

The Reagan administration is still pressing forward on the second route. But it has had only limited and wavering support from Japan and West Germany. That may change as the other countries contemplate the extremely painful market a process they are facing, with their currencies appreciating, their . exports threatened and their economies stagnating. In N.Y.

The Associated Press NEW YORK - Some of the Wall Street brokers arrested in an undercover investigation used cocaine "as a regular method of exchange," dispensing it to employ-ees and customers and trading it for stock tips. U.S. law enforcement authorities said Friday. Nineteen persons, including at least 16 financial workers and two alleged drug suppliers, were errest-ed in New York on Thursday after a three-year investigation conduct-ed by the Drug Enforcement Administration. "Cocaine became an integral part of the personal and professional lives of these people," said

Robert Stutman, a special ngent in charge of the administration in New York City. "We don't believe this case is an aberration."

Those arrested included Wayne D. Robbins, a senior partner in the firm of Brooks, Weinger, Robbins & Leeds Inc.

Authorities also filed suit to seize assets of the firm, which has offices in nine cides. U.S. Attorney Rudolph W. Giuliani said Thursday that he believed it was the first time the government had tried to seize part of a btokerage's assets because of a narcotics violation.

Cocaine was used as a regular method of exchange, allegedly in the business of this firm," Mr. Giuliani said. He said that further charges and arrests were expected. But the lawyer for Brooks, Bert Gusrae, said the firm's principals had "no knowledge of any wide-spread drug distribution or drug network inside the firm."

In addition to the Brooks firm, Mr. Stutman said, those arrested worked for Prudential-Bache, The New York Depository Trust, Ad-vest Corp. and Allied Capital, all financial institutions with offices in the Wall Street area "This is a classic case of how drugs affect every American in this country," he said. "Every American is touched by Wall Street."

Ten of those arrested were brokers and five were professionals in the field, said Robert Strang, a Drug Enforcement Administration spokesman. One other person may ave been a broker, he said. The administration said the arrests stemmed from a three-year investigation that included an undercover agent working at Brooks since mid-March as a broker's as-

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche SANTA BARBARA, California - The White House said Friday it agreed with the monetary policies of the Federal Reserve, dissociating itself from remarks by President Ronald Reagan's budget director. In Christie's auction held on April 9, a processional cross, 58 centimeters (almost 23 inches) high not counting the staff, turned up out of the blue among unrelated European works of art of much later date. Only a handful of dealers were aware of its existence. The iron core covered with silver foil is decorated on the front side with low relief medallions and formal ornament done in the repoussee technique and gilded, and on the reverse with incised scenes, nielloed and gilded. It has been damaged. On the front, a strip of silver with formal ornament is missing on the left arm. On the back, much of the incised detail has been gone

Hastily mounted in three months, "From Byzantium to El Greco" is a random selection with no theme, This has its advantages. All historical considerations set aside masterpieces are left to speak for themselves. Some were unknown until a year ago. An image that leaps at the visitors right at the beginning is an icon of St. John the Baptist attributed to Constantinople and believed to date from around 1300, It turned up on the market out of the blue and was snatched by the British Museum last August.

Other discoveries are occasionally made in Greek monasteries. The most spectacluar one to be seen in the exhibition is an "Adoration of the Magi" that offers a curious Byzantine interpretation of 16thcentury Venetian Mannerism. It is signed by one Domenikos, considered by many to be Domenikos Theotokopoulos, known as El Greco. The "demonstration" needs perhaps a little more than a coincideuce in name .- Domenikos -and the Cretan origin of both that icon and the painter El Greco. # A New Path for Photojournalism

By Andy Grundberg F IFTEEN years after the de-I mise of Life as a weekly maga-zine, photojournalism is reclaiming its former glamorous, legendary status. Pictures that were taken on assignments for magazines and newspapers now regularly reappear - in frames - on the walls of museums and galleries. The photojournalists of yesteryear are being enshrined in biographies and celebrated with retrospective exhibitions. Today's photojournalists are hig draws on the photography lecture-and-symposium circuit.

The signs of photojournalism's new eacher extend to the bookstores, where the patriotic anthology "A Day in the Life of America" bas been on the U.S. best-seller list since before Christmas, and to the have become the newest breed of Hollywood protagonist. In Oliver Stone's 1986 film "Salvador." James Woods plays the role with en our emotional responses to war considerable panache and a sliver Curiously, however, the New Photojournalism has arisen without any new vehicles for its propagation. If anything, the number of journalism. What separates these photographers from their younger colleagues is less a matter of style than of content: they still seem to believe that a well-organized photograph communicates o certain meaning about its subject. Meiselas, Peress and Webb seem more acutely and selfconsciously aware of the abyss between photographic appearances and the events they portray.

ICP/Midtown's current exhibition in New York serves as a ready gauge of how far the New Photojournalism has extended its influence into the world of reportage. David Burnett stands out as the most refined colorist, and his compositions often are as vibrant as his colors.

By virtue of its name, photojournalism has long defined itself according to what appears in organs of the press. What can we make, then, of pictures calling themselves photojournalism that appear in an exhibition setting? Or, more to the point, why is it that, in the 1930s, photojournalism is increasingly seen in contexts other than magazines and newspapers?

It would be easy to blame the magazines and newspapers themselves, to criticize them for relying Miguel Rio Branco are among the on images of a sensational sort, for graphic and easy to understand -"stoppers" in the jargon of the '50s picture magazines.

Yet it may turn out that photojournalism's turn to less ephemeral and more aesthetic ways of being seen has little to do with the desires of magazines and newspapers and everything to do with their archrival, television. More and more, the news remains news only until seek to expand their genre with the next network news update; television cameras exhaust the image potentials of a subject long before photographers get their film back to their offices. As video cameras designed to take still pictures reach the marketplace, news photography will have to be redefined,

But the current generation of photojournalists is not the first to personal points of view, or to adopt the formal syntax of art photography in their work. Bruce Davidson, Charles Harbutt and Abigail Heyman, for example, independently developed a hybrid form of photojournalism in the early 1970s,

Prize Money Pays Off at Boston Marathon

The Associated Press BOSTON - The Boston Marathon, invigorated by its venture into prize money payoffs last year, will be run Monday with one of the strongest fields in its 91-year history.

The lure of at least $71,000 for the winner - $40,000 cash and a Mercedes-Benz valued at $31,000 - has attracted an awesome field.

Jack Mahoney, special events co-ordinator for the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., which last year committed $10 million for 10 years to the race, has called it the best field since the 1984 Olympics, and possibly better.

It includes Juma Ikangaa of Tanzania, the world's top-ranked marathoner: defending champion Rob de Castella of Australia, ranked No. 2 in the world; Steve Jones of Wales, ranked No. 1 in 1985 and the second-fastest marathoner in history: John Treacy of Ireland, the 1984 Olympic silver medalist: Toshihiko Seko of Japan, the 1981 champion and No. 4 in the world; 1984-85 winner Geoff Smith of Rodgers of the United States, and 1986 U.S. road racer of the year Ed for his extracurricular work. Evesione. The women's field is not as impressive because of the loss of Olympic gold medalist and U.S. recordholder Joan Benoit Samuelson, who has a thigh injury, and Lorraine Moller of New Zealand, the 1984 champion who withdrew after suffering from an iron deficiency.

Still, it includes Olympic bronze medalist Rosa Mota of Portugal, 1980 Boston winner Jacqueline Gareau of Canada and 1985 champion Lisa Larsen Weidenbach.

Union Picketing Barred

A federal judge Thursday barred a hotel workers' union involved in a en because of the outstanding field dispute with John Hancock from ruption of Monday's race. The Associated Press reported.

But Domenic Bozzotto, president of Local 26 of the Hotel, Restaurant, Institutional Employees and Bar-tenders Union, indicated that the ruling would not keep union supporters away from the race.

The ruling by U.S. District Judge Walter J. Skinner came on a request by the National Labor Relations Board, which supported a claim by John Hancock. The union contends John Hancock is blocking its attempts to organize workers at the company-owned Back Bay Hilton, while the NLRB and John Hancock say the union should be directing its organizing drive at the management firm that runs the hotel.

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, South Carolina (AP) - Mark Hayes set a front-nine course record Thursday en route to a seven-under-par 64 that gave him a two-stroke lead after one round of the Heritage Classic golf Lournament.

Hayes, 37, birdied the first three holes in sbooting six-under-par 30 for the front nine at the difficult little Hilton Head Golf Links. His score broke the course record of 31 set by Jack Nicklaus in 1975 and equaled several times since.

The double bogey led to a score of 72 and Norman saying. "Obviously, the golfing gods still don't like me."

card. In Kansas City, it is not even necessary to call him by his last name. He's simply Bo.

That's Bo, the way baseball fans say "Reggie," and used to say "the Mick," "the Duke" and "the Bahe." Two weeks into the season, in the second month of his major-league career - dating to run of the game, a towering grand slam over the September of last year - Bo Jackson is generating the kind of attention from which legends are made. George Brett hit .390 in 1980 and the Royals' fans were respectful, watching a Rembrandt at home plate. Jackson shows a potential to hit home said, displaying the evidence: a splintering along runs that threaten traffic on Interstate 70 and the trademark. "I thought the ball was going to be those same fans are on the edge of their seats, caught on the warning track. But it kept going," shouting, "Bo," buzzing like so many bechives.

"I hope they aren't spoiled," Jackson said the other night, "I hope they see me as a baseball team but I'm not a one-man show."

All eyes in Royals Stadium are watching No. 16 walking deliberately to home plate, twiring a bat as if it were a druin major's baton. His. name is in lights on the scoreboard and stitched on the back of his uniform shirt, but this is one player the fans already know without a score card. In Kansas City, it is not even necessary to Teammates watch in amazement, marveling at his early season exploits. For example, 45 minutes after Tuesday night's game against the Detroit Ti-gers, some of the Royals first learned that Jackson had cracked his bat when he hit his second home right-center-field fence that traveled more than 420 feet (128 meters). They shook their heads, some wondering whether this was just an embellishment.

"When I hit it, I heard the bat crack," Jackson He sat at his locker, having removed his uniform

December 1985 at the Downtown Athletic Club in New York City when Jackson said he had not decided whether he would pursue a professional baseball or football career. The popular assump-tion was that he was using baseball as leverage, enhancing his bargaining position as the National Football League's prospective No. I draft choice.

"I like making liars out of people," Jackson said. "I knew people were saying, 'Here this guy just won the Heisman Trophy and he talks about baseball.' But I don't listen to that malarkey. I was gonna do what I was gonna do. And if I suffered for it, then it was my decision."

Even as a youngster in Bessemer, Alabama, Jackson preferred baseball. But he turned down a contract offer from the Yankees after high school to accept a football scholarship at Auburn. Four years later, with the Heisman Trophy on his resume and the Tampa Bay Buccancers offering substantially more money than the Royals, Jackson chose to pursue his first love. "What I like about baseball is being able to go out there and compete against one guy," he said. "It's stinct — and an unwavering determination in suc-ceed. He has not played nearly enough baseball through the years to anticipate what a pitcher will throw in certain situations, how a ball will veen when it is hit to him in left field, or even how to take a proper lead on first base. But he wants to learn.

"I dedicated my work habits in baseball this spring," he said. "I eat and sleep baseball. And ninety-nine and three-quarters percent of the time, what I put my mind to, I get."

Ed Napoleon, a coach for the Royals, was Jack-soo's tutor in the instructional league last fall, teaching some of the basics youngsters learn at the Little League level. "When he fielded a ball, he would hold his glove flat on the ground and the ball would roll up his arm," Napoleon said. "I showed him how to drop his wrist so the glove would be perpendicular.

"The thing about Bo, though, is his ability to retain what he's taught," Napoleon said. "You work on something a day or two and it sticks. He doesn't fall back into old habits."

Jackson is learning on the job. Every afternoon, he arrives at the stadium early, working with Napoleon. Duriog batting practice, be is watched closely by Hal McRae, the Royals' batting coach and pinch-hitter.

McRae, for one, has, cautioned about becoming overeothusiastic. "Bo is not out of the woods by no means," be said. "To come this fast is unusual, but don't expect too much. Just enjoy what you're seeing while the ride lasts."

McRae played on the Cincinnati Reds teams of the 1970s, numbering Johnny Bench, Tony Perez, Pete Rose, Ken Griffey and George Foster among his teammates. He has been a teammate of Brett's for 14 years. Yet, he said: "Bo has more natural ability than anyone I've ever seen. I'm not saying he's the best player, but be has the most talent.

What upsets Jackson are the continued references to football. He is proud of what he achieved but does oot want to dwell on the subject. He managed a smile when reminded he is the only Heisman Tropby winner to hit a grand slam.

"My teammates call me the football player but that's good-natured," he said. "I went back to Auburn last year and could have gone to watch the last four sames. But I didn't. I went hunting or to a shopping mall instead.

"I knew that if I went to the games, people would say, 'Bo is leaning toward football again.' I don't have time for football again. Maybe, it wasn't the best thing to do. but it was what I had to do."

"The agooy the Royals will go through will be worth it," said the Tigers' manager. Sparky Anderson. "What an enjoyable agony. It was money well spent By 1989, you're not going to want to throw the ball over the plate against him."

scored 61 points Thursday night and became the first player in 24 years - and the only man other than Wilt Chamberlain - to score 3,000 in a National Basketball Association season.

Jordan now has 3,024 points, with game remaining Friday night in Boston. With nine more points, Jordan can catch Chamberlain for the third highest one-season point total, but the 7-foot-1-inch (2.15-meter) Chamberlain's record totals of 4,029 (m 1961-62) and 3,586 (1962-63) are out of reach.

"I think it's a great compliment to be mentioned in the same sentence as Wilt, and a great achievement," said Jordan, who is 6-6. "It caps off a great season for me." Although the Atlanta Hawks double-teamed and even tripleteamed him, Jordan broke the 3,000 barrier by scoring his 38th point on a lay-up early in the third period; he had 48 points by the end of three quarters.

With that lay-up, Jordan also completed a run of 23 straight points for the Bulls, another NBA

He has only one mare in foal from the 25 bred in him this year, and most top stallions have been retired long before the age of 26.

Northern Dancer, who won the 1964 Kentucky Derby and Preakness Stakes, entered stud in 1965. He sired more stakes winners, 123, than any other thoroughbred. Of the 579 registered foals of racing age he sired, 21 percent were stakes winners, 23 were voted champions.

E.P. Taylor who bred and raced Northern Daneer, origioally offered the stallion for sale as a yearling for $25,000. There were no takers.
